Using Social Media in Employment Decisions: A Good or a Bad Idea?

Organizer

William J. Bethue, McCandlish & Lillard, P.C.

Co-Presenters

William J. Bethune, Senior Counsel, McCandlish & Lillard, P.C.

Laura Golden Liff, Associate, McCandlish & Lillard, P.C.

Social Media is already in the workplace, many times as a distraction that reduces productivity. Many employers are using social media to increase awareness of their brand. Some employers enlist their employees in social media marketing campaigns. What about using social media in making employment decisions? What are the benefits and what are the risks? Are there practical ways to tap into social media, while limiting expense and exposure to claims? How have the lawsuits come out?

Topics of Discussion Include:

1. Using social media in hiring decisions. What are the top 3 things that employers should and should not do?
2. Using social media to evaluate. What works and what doesn't.
3. Using social media to discipline or discharge. What's safe and what's not.
4. What policies should an employer adopt concerning social media?

About our Presenters

Bill Bethune is a member of CXO's steering committee and Senior Counsel at McCandlish & Lillard, P.C., where he focuses on business law. Bill has more than 35 years of experience in handling complex, multi-party commercial litigation in federal and state courts; arbitrating and mediating commercial, insurance, securities, and employment disputes; and counseling business clients on a broad range of contracting, employment, creditor rights, and entity formation matters. Bill is licensed to practice law in Virginia, Maryland, and the District of Columbia.

Laura Golden Liff is an Associate at McCandlish & Lillard, P.C., where she primarily practices in the area of civil litigation, with an emphasis on commercial, business and fiduciary matters. Laura has spearheaded her firm's use of social media platforms such as Facebook, Twitter, and LinkedIn, and keeps her finger on the pulse of legal trends involving the use of social media in the workplace. Laura is licensed to practice law before state and federal courts in Virginia and the District of Columbia.
